(1) Collins, John J. Introduction to the Hebrew Bible. Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 2004.

In this balanced and thorough introduction to the Hebrew Bible, John J. Collins takes his students on a historical-critical journey through biblical texts. With an accessible yet authoritative tone, he identifies the complex ethical issues raised by the text and challenges his students to understand the responsibilities of interpretation. Drawing on his many years of expert teaching, Collins produces a clear and concise tool for undergraduate, graduate, and seminary settings with maps, images, and suggestions for further reading to guide students along the way. and corruption, a place attracting judgment; but equally it is the focus for eschatological anticipations of a renewed community that does fulfil the ideal.

(2) Joynes, Christine E. and Christopher C. Rowland, eds. From the Margins 2: Women of the New Testament and Their Afterlives. Bible in the Modern World 27. Sheffield: Sheffield Phoenix Press, 2009.

Despite half a century of biblical interpretation that has sought to put women back on the agenda of ancient texts (written largely if not wholly by men), the dominant threads of narrative and doctrine have—with the notable exception of Mary the mother of Jesus—been focused on the lives and actions of men. Reception history tells a different story. It is not the case that there is a recovery of the lives of women hidden behind the pages of the New Testament, for our information remains as sparse and tantalizing as ever. Rather, the study of biblical women's 'afterlives' allows the imaginative engagement of artists and writers to broaden the horizon of interpretative expectations. Whether it is through historical imagination or the grasp of different portrayals of familiar biblical women (like Mary the mother of Jesus or Mary Magdalene), the creative genius of these interpreters, neglected by mainstream biblical textual scholars, only underlines the importance of the biblical women, viewed in the light of their afterlives.

This volume has its origins in a project entitled 'Biblical Women and their Afterlives' conceived and developed by the Centre for Reception History of the Bible at the University of Oxford and organized together with colleagues from the Luce Program in Scripture and Literary Arts at Boston University, USA. This project resulted not only in the present interdisciplinary collection of 21 essays (with their 66 illustrations) but also its companion volume From the Margins 1: Women of the Hebrew Bible and their Afterlives, edited by Peter S. Hawkins and Lesleigh Cushing Stahlberg.

The present volume includes the specially commissioned poem 'To Cast a Stone' by the acclaimed Irish poet John F. Deane.

- (3) Kim, Seong Hee. Mark, Women and Empire: A Korean Postcolonial Perspective. Bible in the Modern World 20. Sheffield: Sheffield Phoenix Press, 2010.

As Mark's Gospel moves toward its climax, four stories of women challenge Jesus in his mission to establish the empire of God against the backdrop of the Roman Empire: those of the poor widow (12.41-44), the anointing woman (14.1-11), the women at the cross and the burial (15.40-41, 47), and the women at the empty tomb (16.1-8). They are stories that would seem to demand both a feminist and a postcolonial perspective on the part of their readers—yet Kim's is the first reading of the Gospel that has taken an explicitly postcolonial feminist stance.

In addition to the feminist and the postcolonial themes, the third strand in Seong Hee Kim's approach arises from her Korean context, which provides her with the concept of Salim interpretation, that is, ‘making things alive’. Starting from the reader’s context, she develops a Salim hermeneutics for each of the four stories by engaging in a dialogue between the biblical story and the reader’s use of her or his own imagination. The goal of her interpretation is such a making things alive, a mending of broken things, and an opening up of meaning—in contrast to the tendency of historical criticism, which has striven to identify a single, correct meaning in the biblical text.

- (4) Schuller, Eileen M. and Carol A. Newsom. The Hodayot (Thanksgiving Psalms: A Study Edition of 1QHa). Early Judaism and Its Literature, 36. Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2012

1QHodayot is recognized as one of the most important of the Dead Sea Scrolls and key to understanding the specific worldview and piety of its author(s). It contains a collection of psalms giving thanks for deliverance, salvation, knowledge, and divine mercy. This volume contains the text of 1QHodayot published in the definitive Discoveries in the Judaean Desert volume 40 and the English translation from that volume, lightly revised. It provides the most up-to-date, accessible, and inexpensive access to the text, translation, and official numbering of the columns and lines of 1QH.

- (5) Runia, David T. and Gregory E. Sterling, eds. The Studia Philonica Annual: Studies in Hellenistic Judaism, Volume XXIV. Studia Philonica. Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2012.

This volume assesses past, theoretically engaged work on Israelite religion and presents new approaches to particular problems and larger interpretive and methodological questions. Topics of interest to the contributors include gender, violence, social change, the festivals, the dynamics of shame and honor, and the relationship of text to ritual. The contributors engage theory from social and cultural anthropology, sociology, postcolonial studies, and ritual studies.

- (6) Singer, Itamar. The Calm before the Storm: Selected Writings of Itamar Singer on the Late Bronze Age in Anatolia and the Levant. Writings from the Ancient World Supplement, 1. Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2011.

In a career that has spanned nearly four decades, more than thirty of them as Professor of Hittitology in the Department of Archaeology and Ancient Near Eastern Cultures at Tel Aviv University, Itamar Singer has had a profound impact on the field of ancient Near Eastern studies, and Hittite studies in particular. His wide-ranging contributions have nowhere been more deeply felt than in the historical reconstruction of the international affairs of the thirteenth century B.C.E.—the end of the Bronze Age in the eastern Mediterranean. The essays collected in this volume are a testament to the impact of his research on understanding Hatti's diplomatic relations with the other great powers in this critical period of human history and on elucidating the complex dynamics that led to the disintegration of the Hittite Empire.

(d) ONLINE PROJECT OF THE BAYERISCHE STAATSBIBLIOTHEK

Many of you would be interested to know that the Bayerische Staatsbibliothek has digitized about 6,400 books (many of them published fairly recently). It allows everyone to download the full PDFs. These PDFs are fully searchable. The website is at <http://digi20.digitale-sammlungen.de>. (For those who prefer English, just click on the tiny British flag in the upper right corner of your screen.)

(e) JSTOR INITIATIVE

ASOR encourages you to sign up for free access to the latest issue of Near Eastern Archaeology (NEA) through JSTOR
<http://www.jstor.org/token/NEA761QbVkdZ9K6Vi9SV5V24Mx/mark.asor.org>

(f) ICI LIAISON NETWORK

For questions about the liaison network, please contact Tim Langille (tim.langille@gmail.com).

(g) ICI MEMBERSHIP

There are currently 270 SBL members who have joined at the special ICI rate. This represents 64.5% of the total membership from ICI countries. We are all pleased that many scholars in ICI countries who have the means have paid full membership dues, and are encouraged to realize a steady, although slow, uptick in the number of ICI members. Please encourage your students and colleagues to consider becoming members of SBL. For the special ICI membership form, go to <http://www.sbl-site.org/publications/onlinebooks.aspx>.

(h) EVENTS

The SBL maintains a significant list of events taking place anywhere in the globe. For the full list please go to <http://www.sbl-site.org/meetings/events.aspx>
